I just accepted my admission into California State University Fresno. I am thrilled now that I know where I will be heading now for college; I also now know where to put all my efforts into further education after high school. I've just signed up for my freshman orientation at Fresno State which was seventy dollars! It is scheduled on Thursday June, 26th, 2014 at eight A.M. I will be heading out there with my mother and my father while my younger sister will stay at my aunt's house. They will be providing a lunch while there and we will be able to tour the campus after the orientation at around 4 in the afternoon. My family and I might also check out the apartments by the campus to see what they look like and also get more information on the pricing. I hope it will be a good experience and hope it will really help me on what I can expect from attending CSU Fresno. I also signed up to take a mathematical placement test for the university. On my SAT, I scored below a 550 for mathematics which requires me to take the placement test for Fresno State University. Thankfully, I scored over 500 in the English category so I am exempt from taking the English placement test. The testing takes place on May 3rd, 2014 at the Fresno State campus. People who have to take either the English test or both tests have to be there by 8. Students who only have to take the mathematical test, such as myself, can arrive at the testing location at 11 A.M. That allows me to sleep in for a few hours more, which is good since I love sleeping!

As an update for the status on the apartment I plan to live in, my friend Jose says he found a couple more roommates that we could have live in with us which would really help us on the monthly bills. The more people we room with, the smaller the amount of rent we all would have to pay but it could cause some other problems as well. With a large amount of people in one apartment, there will more than likely be problems concerning rooms and living space. We are still discussing these concerns to prevent future problems but I hope they'll be easy to figure out. My older sister who has a friend that attends Fresno State says that she has information concerning apartments near the campus as well but they aren't provided by the university. Her friend says they're still close and will be a lot less expensive, hopefully she can get me that information soon.

This school year has gone by so fast, it's unbelievable. We have two months left until graduation day and yet I still remember the whole first semester of my senior year like it was only a month ago. I'm still preparing myself for college life and still not ready to leave high school but surprisingly I'm ready to go out into the real world to pursue what I want in life and what I want to do with my future and my career. So I'd like to wish all my peers the best with their lives after high school. Even though I may have some regrets I can't just keep looking back at them, that's the past and I can't change any of it but what I can change and take control of is my future and I will do so with the best of my ability to keep myself on the right path and with the right lifestyle even after I get the career I want and more.
